

Videos about Early Care and Education and Early Intervention Services during the Pandemic

Since the pandemic began, I have been committed to documenting how early intervention and early care and education services have been provided during these extraordinary times, both to illustrate the use of recommended practices for today's practitioners and to preserve them for future generations. I feel very fortunate to have been able to partner with a number of innovative individuals and programs who share this commitment, specifically: Christina Kasprzak, Katy McCullough and their team at the Early Childhood Technical Assistance Center (ECTA); Juliann Woods, Kat Cripe and the Family Guided Routines-Based Intervention (FGRBI) team; and Patty Salcedo and her staff at the Desired Results Access Project. All told, we produced more than 40 videos totaling around 10 hours of video documentation. Because these videos appear across several web sites and pages, this document may help you locate topics of interest.

We are indebted to the dozens of family members, home visitors, teachers, therapists, coaches, administrators, and local and state programs that dedicated their experiences, expertise, and countless hours while sharing their stories – there are far too many names to mention here, but you can learn about them in the end credits of each video.
